Christian in the Middle East. The Struggle for Belonging De kristne i Midtøsten. Kampen for tilhørighet

Cappelen Damm Akademisk 2015
265 Pages

Traditionally the Middle East has been characterized by religious and ethnic pluralism. Today, however, this pluralism is in jeopardy. War, conflict and progress made by militant Islamists have led a growing number of Christians to abandon their faith. Indeed, many fear that the Middle East's Christian population is in the process of disappearing for good.

In this anthology, several of Norway's leading scholars take a closer look at the situation of Christians living in the Middle East and how they struggle to belong – in different ways and with varying means. The book includes, for example, in-depth articles about Christians in Lebanon, the Palestinian territories, Egypt and Turkey – areas where Christians today are under extraordinary pressure.

Yet the situation is not equally dire throughout the region. In the Gulf states, for example, there have never been as many Christian churches as there are today, and the number of Christians in these countries is increasing steadily due to employment immigration.

In addition to chapters devoted to selected countries in the region, the book examines such issues as the Islamic State's relationship to Christianity, Muslim-Christian relations through history, cultural exchange between Christians and Muslims – and Norwegians' changing views of Christians in the Middle East.
